WED PRAIRIES OF TEXAS .-- We find Houston Telegraph a brief account free very singular prairies found in These profices uplify and Ro. ensuing election. These prairies, unlike most of with of weeds, instead of grass. These restare generally ten or fifteen feet high, al so dense that they are almost impene-Meissippi. The settlers of those counties posider these "Weed Prairies" the most raluable portion of the country. The soil this soil for cultivation, the planters have the ensuing election in Nov. next. only to best down the weeds, and then by applying fire and burning over, the soil is let in a condition to receive the seed, be-

The mode of planting these prairies is troly primitive. The plough is seldem used but instead of it, the settlers use a large spiked toller, generally formed of a log with harrow teeth, set at intervals, so as to form rows of shallow holes, when dragged over the ground; into these holes the corn is dropped, and then covered with sight layer of earth, which is generally feled upon it! The seed thus carelessly inted, soon throws up stout, rank blades notil harvest, except one trifling hoeing. The crop of corn thus raised, generally yields forty bushels to the acre. - Buff.
